

Players say no to violence

WOMEN will get free entry into Traeger Park this weekend as part of a campaign against sexual violence.

Football Fans Against Personal Violence invited AFL Central Australia to join the fight against sexual assault and violence against women by wearing purple armbands during games.

Purple is the colour for women's rights.

AFL Central Australia operations manager Kate Egan said all players would wear armbands this weekend.

She said the armbands are a sign of respect for women, compassion for sexual violence victims and leadership against gender violence and abuse.

Visit www.purplearmband.org for more information about the program.

Edition 1 -FRI 25 MAY 2007, Page 064

Correction

THE Centralian Advocate ran a story on Friday that said women would get free entry to Traeger Park as part of a campaign against sexual assault and violence.

The story said entry would be free at the weekend, but the free entry will actually happen on June 23 and June 24.

Players will wear purple armbands as a symbol of grief and respect on the days.

Purple is the colour for women's rights and the armbands are intended to make a statement of respect for women, compassion for sexual assault victims and leadership against gender violence and abuse.

The Advocate apologises for any inconvenience this error has caused.

Edition 1 -TUE 29 MAY 2007, Page 031